TOPIC

THE WORLD OF THE 1980'S: INTELLIGENCE LOOKS AHEAD

Presented as part of the Henry C. Morris Lecture Series

William E. Colby has spent his life in intelligence, from his earliest days parachuting to French and Norwegian resistance forces behind German lines in World War II to his service as Director of the Central Intelligence Agency from 1973 to 1976.

During his years of service, Colby conducted secret operations against the Soviet Union from Scandinavia, helped Italian democratic forces contend with Communist subversion, directed paramilitary operations in Southeast Asia, managed the high technology of satellite sensors and supervised our monitoring Soviet behavior under the first SALT agreement.

During his tenure as Director of the CIA, Colby combined a determination to protect the essential secrets and sources of intelligence with a frank and open recognition that even an agency such as the CIA must be accountable under the U.S. Constitution.

Since 1976, Colby has published a book, HONORABLE MEN, MY LIFE IN THE CIA, written numerous articles, and spoken extensively across the country. He is currently an attorney in the Washington office of Reid & Priest.
